UTNG Soldier enhances Morocco’s Emergency Medical System Program development

Fresh from deployment, Staff Sgt. Jesse Clark of the Utah Army National Guard’s 19th Special Forces Group (Airborne), demonstrated an unwavering commitment to service by volunteering to assist with a critical international initiative from Dec. 3-8, 2024. Leveraging his medical expertise, Clark played a pivotal role in advancing Morocco’s fledgling Emergency Medical System, a key component of the nation’s growing Emergency Management Program.

Clark collaborated closely with the Moroccan Civil Protectorate to streamline the procurement process for medical equipment valued at several hundred thousand dollars. His efforts ensured that the equipment, which includes vital tools for emergency response, would be ready for the first cohort of newly graduated Emergency Medical Technicians. These EMTs are poised to spearhead Morocco’s EMS program, which is vital to enhancing emergency preparedness and public safety across the country.

By contributing his knowledge and dedication, Clark not only facilitated the successful launch of this initiative but also deepened the longstanding partnership between the Utah National Guard and Moroccan civilian agencies. His work exemplifies the impact of individual commitment in fostering international collaboration, underscoring the UTNG’s vital role in strengthening global alliances. This effort marks a significant step forward in Morocco’s journey toward a robust and responsive EMS system.

Utah Air National Guard strengthens ties at Marrakesh Air Show

From October 29 to November 2, 2024, select Airmen from the Utah Air National Guard showcased their expertise and professionalism at the Marrakesh Air Show, hosted by the Royal Moroccan Armed Forces in Marrakesh, Morocco. The event featured a KC-135 Stratotanker and a static display, symbolizing the enduring partnership between the United States and Morocco.

The KC-135, a cornerstone of U.S. aerial refueling capabilities, was a highlight of the show, drawing attention from military officials and aviation enthusiasts alike.

The Utah Airmen engaged with their Moroccan counterparts, providing in-depth insights into the aircraft’s capabilities and its critical role in global operations. Their presence not only highlighted the technological strength of the U.S. Air Force but also demonstrated the value of collaboration in addressing shared security challenges.

Beyond the technical presentations, the air show served as a vital platform for strengthening interpersonal and professional relationships. The Utah Air National Guard team’s interactions with Moroccan personnel reinforced mutual trust and understanding, solidifying the long-standing partnership nurtured through the Utah National Guard’s State Partnership Program.

By participating in this high-profile event, these Airmen contributed significantly to advancing U.S.-Moroccan ties. Their efforts underscored the shared commitment to fostering peace, stability, and cooperation in the region, leaving a lasting impression on all who attended.

Utah Army National Guard Facilitates Joint Visual Inspection for Moroccan Armed Forces

In a collaborative effort to bolster international security and strengthen alliances, the Utah Army National Guard’s State Partnership Program and the UTNG Recruiting and Retention Battalion’s Maj. Shane Sorensen, played a key role in a Joint Visual Inspection mission from Oct. 7-25, 2024. Conducted at the Sierra Army Depot in California, the mission brought together the UTNG team, personnel from the Sierra Army Depot, the U.S. Embassy in Rabat’s Office of Security Cooperation, and experts from the Excess Defense Articles and Security Assistance Management Directorate.

The Royal Moroccan Armed Forces inspected a total of 597 Armored Support Vehicles M1117 as part of a Foreign Military Sales agreement. The meticulous process involved opening and visually assessing each vehicle’s compartments and key components to ensure its operational readiness. Following rigorous inspections, the Royal Moroccan Armed Forces approved all vehicles for delivery.

The M1117 ASVs, classified as Excess Defense Articles, were deemed surplus to the U.S. Army’s needs and repurposed for Morocco’s use. These vehicles will be deployed for border patrol operations, significantly enhancing Morocco’s security infrastructure and reinforcing regional stability.

Last Issues Answer: Counterintelligence

Counterintelligence is a set of activities that protect a country's secrets and assets from foreign intelligence threats. It involves identifying and countering threats from foreign organizations and individuals to prevent or stop spying, sabotage, and intelligence gathering by foreign entities. These tactics include detection, investigation, technical tradecraft, and analysis. Counterintelligence is applied to reinforce security structure; ensure that Army equities have their intended effects, and mold the operational environment.

Using counterintelligence, the 300th Military Intelligence Brigade (Linguists) train, equip, and deploy mission-ready military intelligence linguists. These service members are dedicated to actively detecting, disrupting, and neutralizing enemy espionage activities, protecting sensitive information, conducting investigations, collecting and processing forensic and physical evidence and identifying potential insider threats by gathering information about the enemy's intelligence gathering methods and operations to counter them effectively and plan the appropriate countermeasures to neutralize them.

MISSIONS FROM THE FIELD

BLING BLING: Top Linguists shine in Salt Lake City at the DOD's premier language competition

The ballroom of the Salt Lake City Hyatt Regency resembled a veritable hive of activity as hundreds of Military Intelligence professionals swarmed the Beehive State for the DOD's Best Linguist Competition in the first week of February. Best Linguist, also known as BLING, has become a multinational event hosting more than 100 organizations from the national security enterprise. The competition attracts linguists of the highest caliber and has captured the attention of leaders throughout the DOD because of its innovative mission: preparing military linguists for future conflicts.

"This competition is the most relevant to our business," said Lexi Casey, President of ICA Language Services, a Virginia-based language academy that partners primarily with the Defense Language Institutes in Virginia and Monterey, California. "We go to a lot of language conferences, but our company focuses on military language training. This event provides many resources, and we find a lot of our top recruits here," she said. "It provides a great opportunity for us to not only offer our own services to assist with the DOD mission, but also we are able to hire language enabled personnel to administer our courses," she added.

Since its inception seven years ago, BLING has become the premiere language training event of the DOD. Intentionally designed to be both extremely challenging and blatantly unfair, it has been compared to the Olympics for linguists — both on a linguistic and technical level—and leaders send the best linguists they have to represent their organization and test the worth of their training efforts.

Originally known as the Polyglot Games, BLING began in 2018 as an event for the 300th Military Intelligence Brigade (Linguists). It was originally hosted at the Utah National Guard headquarters in Draper, Utah and was a brigade-level language competition. The Polyglot Games nearly disappeared after the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020. People were unable to congregate en masse, which rendered the original premise of the games untenable. That year, the 300th hosted the Polyglot Games virtually, and by then it was only a fraction of what it had been originally. Over the next couple of years, leaders of the 300th empowered their staff to revamp the games and increase marketing of the event. In February 2023, the brigade launched the overhauled competition to include personnel from across the intelligence spectrum and the games became a major success. Competitors took the news home, and organizations across the U.S. gained new interest in the since renamed Best Linguist Competition.

"There is nothing like this in the Department of Defense," said Staff Sgt. Curtis Starr, a BLING Gamemaster from the 2024 competition.

"There are other language competitions, but they don't have the same level of prestige that the BLING Competition has ascended to."

In 2025, 280 competitors from over 100 different organizations, including military, government civilian agencies, and local universities took part in the competition. The expansion over time from a guard-specific language exercise to a multi-faceted, multi-agency intelligence gathering competition has added tremendous value to not only the DOD, but the state of Utah.

"This conference is stellar. I've never done anything like this," explained William Freedman, a university student majoring in National Security Studies at Utah Valley University. "Being able to bring every intelligence collection agency together like this provides the full picture." Freedman said working with multiple agencies was an eye-opening experience for him and his involvement in the competition has given him a clearer view of his career aspirations.

"I think intelligence is the most important component of public policy, military action, and everything in between. It keeps the government running and our troops safe." He continued "This competition has proved that to me. There's nothing better than fighting for what you believe. (It) engages you physically, mentally, emotionally. I would recommend this competition to anyone following me, 100 percent."

Freedman, who is fluent in French, competed on a multi-agency team filled with experts from multiple intelligence disciplines and organizations. Teams rotated through timed events, each activity coinciding with the five steps of the intelligence cycle, beginning with a road-to-war in-brief and ending with a commander's brief. Competitors must gleam intelligence products from indicators placed throughout the competition and inform their command on what they find.

"We're honing in on the skills that intelligence professionals need in a peer-to-peer combat environment," said 1st Sgt. Michael Baker, a proctor of the site exploitation event in the 2025 BLING games. Baker said that the competition is intended to sharpen the skills of military intelligence service members.

"If anything were to happen, we need to make sure that our Soldiers are trained to the level where they can execute the mission at hand," he said.

Baker mentioned that having multiple components, such as DOD civilians, active-duty military, reservists, and guard members in the competition enhances readiness of the total force.

"What it does is creates a synergistic environment where we are not only competing, but also honing our skills together," he said.

Teams are evaluated in voice interception, site exploitation, document exploitation, open-source collection, operational analysis, and commander's brief. In addition, individuals compete against each other in their target language, challenging their proficiency as premiere linguist experts. Site exploitation was one of the most challenging events of the competition. Teams had 10 minutes to enter a dark room with night vision goggles, scour through vehicles and simulated casualties to find mounds of papers, electronics, and random items in various languages, and decide which materials had high intelligence value based on information gathered. In addition to total darkness, the room was also filled with the sounds of explosions and gunfire.

Within the events, intelligence Soldiers were tested on skills they don't get to exercise everyday, said Spc. Leslie Knaus, an active duty human intelligence collector assigned to the 524th Military Intelligence Battalion, stationed in South Korea. "I'm a French linguist, but in South Korea, I don't get to use my language," she explained. "It was fun to be able to work with my language and encounter new stuff, new vocabulary — and it was interesting because they introduced memes this year. So after all the headache, we had a good laugh at the end."

Knaus said her unit traveled from Seoul to Salt Lake City to pair with Soldiers from the Utah National Guard's 142nd Military Intelligence Battalion. The two Army units combined Soldiers to create an 8-person team, with 4 Soldiers from each unit, to build interoperability between service components. In this case, the combined components were Active Duty Army and Army National Guard.

"Gaps happen when people do not understand each other's jobs," said Chief Warrant Officer 3 Zachary Sibio, command language program manager for the competition.

"When we bring different branches of service, government agencies, and the academic community together in this environment, everyone sees one another's value, which is an amazing thing to watch."

While BLING challenges individual skill sets, the heart of the event is building teammates' diversity in strengths and abilities rather than the individual ability to translate a language. It also serves as an opportunity to practice in a controlled environment, with a diverse group with lots of differing viewpoints and skill sets.

"I think the real benefit is having people train here in a safe environment," said Tech Sgt. Stephanie Battle, a language instructor assigned to the 314th Training Squadron in Monterey, California. "Bringing in our young linguists and our seasoned veterans here gives them a taste of what's to come, and also they can share what they have experienced in their careers so far.”

Networking and building cohesiveness are the major objectives of the BLING competition, however people traveled to Utah to compete. This year, participants were graded in multiple categories such as best linguist, best enlisted service member, best officer, best civilian, and total team performance.

A team from Naval Information Forces won first place in the competition, with Language Enabled Airmen and Air Force Culture and Language Center placing second, and a mixed-service group of military service members titled the “Misfits” took third. 🇺🇸

On the cutting edge of attack aviation

Utah Army National Guard's 1st Battalion, 211th Aviation Regiment welcomes the new AH-64E Apache Guardian into its ranks in West Jordan, Utah, Nov. 23, 2024. These are the most advanced attack helicopters to date, enhancing the Utah Army National Guard's air lethality.

Stories abound of the fear struck in the hearts of enemies of the United States when they see the dreaded Apache helicopter fly through the skies or hear its iconic sound. The Utah Army National Guard is among the very few hosts to the attack aviation units of the United States Army. With its 1st Battalion, 211th Aviation Regiment, or Attack Reconnaissance Battalion, affectionately referred to as the Air Pirates, the battalion is home to the newest AH-64E Apache Guardian.

The Apache attack helicopter was developed in the 1980s as a replacement model for the Bell AH-1 Cobra. Cobras were used throughout the Vietnam War for close air support. Equipped with either a 7.62mm "Minigun" and a M129 grenade launcher, or two "Miniguns", these single-engine attack helicopters provided lethality throughout the 1970s and 1980s. With the implementation of new Apaches came newer technology and added firepower, with capabilities including advanced targeting systems, lower-mounted 30mm chain guns, and up to 15 Hellfire missiles instead of the eight carried by previous models. The upgraded twin engines and four-blade rotor provides more power and added fuel efficiency allowing the aircraft to stay on mission longer.

Utah has been home to the Apaches since 1989. The state's diverse natural environments provide a wide variety of terrain, mountainous elevations and varying climates which creates an optimal training environment for Army attack aviators such as the Air Pirates.

"We can fly 15 minutes in any direction and have a variety of challenges with higher altitudes, winds, and weather conditions making Utah a great place to stay combat ready," explained Lt. Col. Robbie Heightman, an Apache pilot with the 1-211 ARB.

The arrival of the AH-64 Echo "Guardian" Apache model brings added capabilities to the unit. These models have significant improvements on a variety of systems adding to the overall lethality and utility of the aircraft. With a more aerodynamic body, enhanced rotor systems, upgraded transmission and gearbox, the echo models utilize the full power of their engines and improve performance in the diverse conditions Utah offers. An additional capability of the echo model is Link 16 systems which allows the aircraft to communicate more effectively across both federal and state agencies.

"The echo model has more precise sighting systems, and it has increased FLIR [Forward-looking infrared] capabilities," said Staff Sgt. Shawn Calchera, a technical inspector with the 1-211th ARB. "With the attack mission of the Apache and the sighting systems it has, it gives us an ability to see things that no other aircraft can. There's a lot of search-and-rescue missions that our unit has been asked to help with and that's one of the things that it really does excel at."

The readiness of the Air Pirates was tested when the battalion had a sudden call to action less than two months after receiving the new aircraft. As Heightman and fellow pilot Chief Warrant Officer 4 Joseph Vandrimmelen were flying a routine training flight in the new echo model, they received a call and were summoned back to the Army Aviation Support Facility in West Jordan. As one pilot refueled the aircraft, the other received a mission brief. In what seemed like five minutes, they were already en route to western Wyoming to assist with search-and-rescue operations of a missing aircraft.

Heightman credited the preparation of the regiment for the quick response time. Having the aircraft, information, and equipment ready is paramount to mission success. Heightman credited the detailed information provided by Maj. Rory McCarthy, intelligence officer for the 1-211th ARB, and the behind the scenes work from the support staff being key to the mission's success.

"[McCarthy] was able to do some analysis of the flight path of the aircraft using flight data that really pointed us in the right direction," said Heightman. "It's hugely advantageous to have this kind of information flow into the cockpit."

After traveling 125 nautical miles to the location of the downed aircraft, the pilots used sensors and thermal imaging cameras to quickly locate the aircraft. The added capabilities of the echo model allowed the pilots to maintain a higher elevation and use less fuel to accomplish their mission. Heightman said that the flight was also noticeably smoother given the complicated weather conditions they faced. Improved capabilities, and advanced technology in the echo model has given the Air Pirates expanded ability for search and rescue explained Col. Jon Richardson, director of aviation and safety for the Utah National Guard.

"The Apache is designed to be an attack aircraft as well as a reconnaissance aircraft, but the strong point of the Apache is its sensor package that comes on it," Richardson said. "For us to be able to go out and search and find lost hikers, downed aircraft or other things that are deemed emergencies to life-saving measures, this is one of the best platforms available."

Following their mission, Heightman and Vandrimmelen each said they were impressed by the upgrades to the new echo model Apache aircraft and are excited to continue training and discovering the increased capabilities of this airframe.

Search and rescue missions are a great capability of the echo model, but not the intended purpose of the aircraft. The Apache helicopter, at its core, is an attack aircraft. These machines have carried the load in combat since their introduction, and often times, Air Pirates have been at the controls. The unit has deployed several times over the last 20 years and demonstrated the capabilities of the older Apache models to its fullest, completing both attack and reconnaissance missions in multiple countries.

"We had a lot of really good stuff on our deployments," said Vandrimmelen, "We supported a lot of really unique, super cool missions supporting coalition partners; the Germans, the Norwegians and the Italians. Basically, every element of Joint Special Operation Command that you could think of, as well as running our regular military patrols."

Between deployments the Air Pirates sustain a heightened training status and fast-paced operational tempo. Crew chiefs from the regiment maintain their aircraft and must have a mastery of the various systems and functions before pilots can take flight.

A daily routine for the crew chiefs is to do preventative maintenance daily inspections. During the PMD, team members conduct a light once over of the aircraft, ensuring that the oil and fuel systems are full, hydraulic systems are working correctly, and there's no leaks or anything that is obviously broken. Following 25 flight hours or two weeks the crew chiefs will go through a more in-depth inspection of the aircraft. From taking off panels, blades and checking the rotors the maintainers ensure critical components are up to standard. Every 500 hours the Apache is dismantled to nuts and bolts and inspected on every system the helicopter uses.

"As Apache crew chiefs, our job is to own these aircraft, to maintain them, take care of them and do everything daily to keep it flying," said Sgt. Micheal Judd, a crew chief with the Air Pirates. "Everything that we do, every screw we remove is tracked on this aircraft making sure that we're up to date on the inspections and everything, so that we know when we need to look at something and when we need to replace things, and then how we can fix everything."

After maintenance, a technical inspector verifies the service and ensures the quality of the aircraft, based on the records and physical work done. All work is checked to ensure airworthiness and readiness for the high-training tempo the pilots must maintain. The technical inspectors also do more behind the scenes.

"We keep track of all of our components to make sure that we're replacing them at the proper time, because unfortunately, unlike the wheeled vehicles, you can't call a tow truck when parts fail on an aircraft," said Calchera. "We have to preemptively replace them prior to failure."

Pilots and crew chiefs both have vital roles to keep the aircraft in flight and the mission of aviation moving smoothly.

From logging flight hours, running diagnostics and understanding the maintenance needed after flight operations is how these two professions work together.

“They’re [crew chiefs] huge because it’s their aircraft. We’re just borrowing it as pilots. These are their aircraft. They know them in and out,” said Vandrimmelen. “They know every little inch, every nut and bolt on these things. They know how to maintain them, and they maintain them very well. I would argue that we have some of the best crew chiefs in the Army.”

With the constant readiness of the fleet, the Air Pirates remain prepared to respond to crisis within a moment’s notice and carry out their mission defending the skies with the most advanced attack helicopter in the world. 🇺🇸

A new approach to military morale, welfare and recreation

As the largest active-duty military installation in Utah, Hill Air Force Base owns and operates facilities throughout the state that are specifically designed to enhance the morale welfare and recreational opportunities for service members and their families. These range from archery and firearm ranges on the Base to the cabins at Carter Creek off the MirrorLake Highway in the Uinta Mountain range. There are other military programs at Tooele Army Depot, Dugway Proving Ground, and at Camp Williams that provide a variety of services such as RV and equipment storage areas, recreational equipment rental and discounted ticket sales for theme parks and events. All these programs are designed to provide equipment and space to rest and recuperate from the demands of military life.

Years ago, one of the facilities owned and operated by Hill Air Force Base was a small seven-room ski lodge on Snowbasin Resort, its story, or at least the one I will present here, picks up with a discussion about Utah hosting the 2002 Winter Olympics. When the 2002 Olympic Games were confirmed for Salt Lake City, and throughout the planning and development stages of Utah's preparations for the games, the ski lodge became a casualty of development. Through some congressional action, the Air Force Base was promised a replacement facility but not money or a timeline to replace it.

Now, more than 20 years later, and with the help of Utah's Military Installations Development Authority that promise is fulfilled. A new public – private partnership was established between landowners, developers, city and county governments and the DOD, a world-class facility was constructed with service members in mind. The new Deer Valley East Village along with its Grand Hyatt Deer Valley hotel and resort has partnered with the DOD to provide discounted and affordable rates on rooms, rentals, and other amenities for service members who choose to use the facility. Officially opened for business in November 2024, the hotel is taking reservations, and although the facility is open to the public it has reserved 100 rooms and spaces that it prioritizes for military MWR. Along with hotel style rooms complete with an amazing view in almost every space, the hotel and private condominium owners rent living spaces on several of the floors for larger groups offering both two- and three-bedroom condos. The condos are beautiful and full of lavish amenities. In addition, there is a small lounge on the lobby floor which is reserved only for military affiliated members and provides a quiet place to relax and enjoy the mountain atmosphere. Whether your stay takes you to the snow-covered ski slopes during Utah’s winter or to the miles of biking trails that span the aspen forests, grasses and wildflowers of this mountain paradise, you will find the stay relaxing and enjoyable. With Jordanelle Reservoir just across the street and the Uinta mountains a few more minutes to the east, and Park City’s high-end dining and shopping a few minutes west, you will be staying in one of the most central areas to some of Utah’s best recreational opportunities.

I will not spend much time talking about the year-round heated pool, fitness facilities, or game room that comes equipped with arcade games, board games, a variety of video game consoles and TVs and of course a few other fun activities for children and adults alike. Nor will I spend much time talking about the on-site shops and eateries where you can purchase a variety of items and food. More information on these are best viewed on the hotels website, just look up Grand Hyatt Deer Valley or go to <https://www.hyatt.com/grand-hyatt/en-US/slcgp-grand-hyatt-deer-valley>.

Once you have seen the pictures and have envisioned you or your family spending time at this amazing location, and once the sticker shock wears off, check out the link for the military affiliated members and keep an eye on the prices. There are three price tiers designed to encourage military members to experience the resort: category A – E1-E6, category B – E7-E9, O1-O3 or WO1-CW3, and category C – O4-O10 or CW4-CW5. There is also usually a 20% discount on food and beverages (excluding alcohol). These discounts are less at certain times of the year like Christmas and during the Sundance Film Festival, but the “blackout dates” are minimal. Check it out at <https://www.hyatt.com/info/deer-valley-mwr>.

In a quick search for pricing, using a search for one room with two adults and two children, I discovered a few things I wanted to point out here. Looking for a room mid-week in March 2025 Tuesday – Thursday nights I found an E6 could expect to pay as little as $109 a night, while an O6 could expect to pay as little as $201 a night for a nice room with a view. Looking to book these same rooms without the discount code I found the prices closer to $800-900 per night. Of course, larger rooms, especially the condo spaces are significantly more expensive.

If a vacation to a beautiful mountain resort is something that interests you, check this place out. To be completely transparent, there is still construction going on in and around the property and probably will be for many months if not years. The ski slopes are open, and the summer activities should be ready by the time the snow melts, but the entire plan for this resort is not yet fully built. None the less, it is an amazing location, and as the first of its kind, this establishment is growing to meet the demands of a world-class military MWR facility. In my observation, and from speaking to the developers and managers of this enterprise during the ribbon-cutting event on Jan. 9, 2025, I am excited to see the results of this unique trial project and I predict (with no credentials to back it) that this will be a model of future DOD development and of future opportunity for military service members and their families. Keep this place in mind and watch as it develops its unique business model. 🇺🇸

Utah Air National Guard Honors the Airmen of the Year 2024

The Utah Air National Guard celebrated its Airmen of the Year during a banquet held in their honor at the Zions Bancorporation's Midvale Technology Campus on Jan. 11, 2025, in Midvale, Utah.

The Airman of the Year banquet celebrated excellence, resilience, and dedication, featuring inspiring speeches from Maj. Gen. Daniel Boyack, the adjutant general of the Utah National Guard; Gov. Spencer Cox; and Brig. Gen. Chris Buckner, the assistant adjutant general of the Utah Air National Guard.

In his heartfelt address, Cox expressed deep appreciation for the Air National Guard and its members, emphasizing the trust and admiration they command. "You're the only people left that everybody trusts," he said, underscoring the critical role the Guard plays not only in Utah but across the nation.

Reflecting on his unique experience of obtaining the highest security clearance of any governor, Cox shared the gravity of global challenges and his gratitude for the individuals in the room.

"The more I learn about what is happening out there, the more grateful I am for the people in this room," he stated. Cox praised the Guard's unmatched culture of excellence and care, adding, "You train hard, work hard, and care about each other. The very values of our nation depend on you being the best."

Cox concluded by recognizing the families and loved ones of service members, whose support makes their service possible. He offered a personal message of trust and pride: "I trust you, and that is the greatest compliment that I can give anyone. I trust you, and I'm proud of you."

Boyack also delivered a powerful and heartfelt address, honoring the nominees and their families. He emphasized the Air National Guard's invaluable role both domestically and internationally, stating, "You are the glue that holds our country and this world together." Highlighting the Guard's vital contributions, Boyack noted, "The Guard has really become the easy button for so many different scenarios."

Boyack praised Utah's reputation as a leader in innovation and excellence, sharing that the chief of the National Guard Bureau prioritized a visit to Utah due to the state's strong reputation. He expressed profound gratitude to the families of service members, acknowledging their sacrifices.

Reflecting on a recent deployment, he remarked, "Seeing fathers meet their kids for the first time and families reunited was a tender reminder of the sacrifices made by our families."

Concluding his speech, Boyack commended the volunteers who ensured the timely return of the 204th Maneuver Enhancement Brigade on Christmas Eve, calling it a testament to Utah's dedication and community spirit.

He left attendees with a message of pride and support: "You are some of the best people I know. My family and I are better because we get to associate with you."

Buckner closed the evening with remarks that encapsulated the event's spirit. Expressing gratitude to the families of service members, he humbly acknowledged their sacrifices: "Two simple words, thank you, can never do justice for the sacrifice you make to serve this great state and nation." He emphasized the unique strength of the Utah National Guard, saying, "One of the things that the Utah National Guard does well is it takes really good people and makes them better, which in turn makes the state and our nation better."

Buckner praised the Airmen of the Utah Air National Guard for their exceptional performance over the past year, acknowledging their efforts during a time of increasing demands.

"The National Guard really is the key to our nation's strength, homeland response, and warfighting power." Buckner concluded with a message of pride and optimism for the future: "Our values of integrity first, service before self, and excellence in all we do will always steer us home. It's an absolute privilege to associate with all of you."

As the evening came to a close, attendees were reminded of the extraordinary dedication and resilience of the Utah Air National Guard and its members, whose service ensures the safety and strength of the state and nation.

Utah Army National Guard Soldier awarded the Utah Cross

Officer Andrew Wood, a police officer with the Tooele Police Department, and a sergeant with the Utah Army National Guard’s 2nd Battalion, 222nd Field Artillery Regiment, was awarded the Utah Cross, Mar. 15, 2025. The Utah Cross is the second-highest state award available to Utah National Guard military members. It is bestowed to courageous individuals who distinguish themselves above and beyond the call of duty.

On Jun. 3, 2023, Wood acted quickly and bravely with his partner, Officer Michael Madrid, to rescue a 12-year-old-girl from drowning when she became trapped inside her family’s minivan.

That afternoon, a spring rainstorm had pounded and saturated the ground when Wood and Madrid were on patrol near Settlement Canyon Reservoir, Tooele, Utah.

“I wanted to go up and check the water table, just to kind of make sure city hall was aware if we needed to fill sandbags,” said Wood.

Meanwhile, at the bank of the reservoir near the dam on the northwest side, a mother was fishing with her son and daughter. When the mother returned to her minivan with her kids, after climbing up the soggy, marshy bank, they prepared to go home.

The mother thought that the back end of her van might be blocking traffic, so she tried to creep her van forward, but when she put her foot on the brake pedal, her foot slipped because her shoes were muddy. Her foot accidentally smashed the gas pedal and accelerated the minivan straight into the water with all three occupants inside.

A panic ensued, and the mother got out, with only enough time to retrieve her son before water gushed into the van, forcing the doors closed. She was unable to reach her daughter sitting in the rear seats. The windows were also in the up position, trapping the girl inside by herself.

Suddenly, several concerned citizens ran to the officers’ patrol car.

“My partner and I were flagged down by a couple of people,” said Wood. “They told us a van had driven right into the reservoir.”

The officers moved quickly to get to the van’s location, which was just off the side of Settlement Canyon Road.

“Once we got to the location where the vehicle had gone into the water, it was completely submerged at that point,” said Wood.

As the officers approached the shore, they noticed several onlookers had been deterred from jumping in by the freezing cold water. Disregarding their own comfort and safety, Wood and Madrid sprang into action and urgently removed their equipment from their uniforms. The officers jumped in and swam toward the position they believed the van to be.

The officers attempted multiple times to get to the trapped girl inside.

“We tried punching the window and pulling on the door,” said Wood. “We made numerous attempts to try to get inside, but we couldn’t.”

The outside pressure of the water was too great for them to simply open the doors. The water around the van had already become quite murky as the mud continued to get stir up from all the activity.

When Wood saw his supervisor Sgt. Chris Thompson at the scene, he had a wild idea that just might work to save the girl.

“Bring me your gun and I’ll try to shoot the window!” Wood called out to Thompson.

Madrid swam to shore to retrieve Thompson’s duty weapon and passed it over to Wood. Once Wood dove back underwater, his vision was completely obscured by the clouded water.

Wood recounted the critical details of that moment, “I just felt where the window was and kind of pictured where the child would be floating in the van,” he said.

He pointed the weapon down and away toward the front of the van and fired and then went back up for air.

“I went down again, and I saw her arm floating,” said Wood. “I went into the van to try to pull her out, but she was kind of stuck behind the headrest,”

Utah Army National Guard Sgt. Andrew Wood recounts his story at Camp Williams about rescuing a 12 -year-old girl from a submerged minivan in the Settlement Canyon Reservoir in Tooele, Feb. 4, 2025.

Wood went back up for air and signaled to everyone that he had felt her arm. He went back underwater and went a little further into the van to move her body around the headrest. Then he brought her out and pushed her to the shore. Madrid helped him carry the girls’ lifeless body to safety.

“She was unconscious, pale, and her lips were blue,” said Wood. “We did CPR until EMS [Emergency Medical Services] showed up, maybe less than a minute later. It felt like an eternity.”

Then the two officers helped carry the girl up the steep muddy bank to the ambulance.

The girl had been underwater for about six minutes, which is long enough to cause permanent brain damage. However, later when Wood followed up with the hospital, they told him the girl was responding verbally. Wood said a sigh of relief washed over him knowing she would be okay.

Reflecting on the incident, Wood said, “It’s incredible. I mean, it definitely says a lot about who you are when you get thrown into a situation like that. And sometimes you’re afraid and you just have to kind of put that on the back burner, and don’t forget that you have a job to do.”

Months later, his leadership informed him that he would be receiving the Utah Cross. Wood was enthralled.

“It feels pretty good,” Wood said. “It’s exciting.”

Considering if he would have done anything differently, Wood stated, “No. Honestly, no. Maybe swim a little faster. But other than that, everything worked out the way it was supposed to work.”

The experience, which was like a scene right out of a movie, will undoubtedly remain with Wood forever.

“Yeah, it sticks with me. It also sticks with the other officers that were with me that day, and it has brought us closer to her and her family. We stay in touch with the family often. It’s a lifelong friendship. So that’s cool.”

Wood also stated, “I’m really proud of my fellow officers. And I’m really proud to be a part of Bravo Battery in the Triple Deuce. I have no doubt any of them would have done the same thing.”

Knowing his actions that day have relieved a family of their worst fears, Wood has a renewed sense of how to tackle some of life’s toughest curveballs.

“Sometimes,” Wood continued, “you’re afraid and you just have to have the courage to step up and do something, and think of a way through it to save a life.”

FLASHBACK PHOTO

A Utah National Guard AH-1S Cobra flies over Kennecott Copper Mine in 1983

An AH-1S Cobra from the Attack Helicopter Troop, 163d Armored Cavalry Regiment, Utah National Guard flies over Kennecott Copper Mine near Salt Lake City, Utah in 1983. The 163d was the first National Guard unit to receive several variants of the AH-1 Cobra. The 163d's designation was changed from an Army aviation unit to attack helicopter troop in 1975 and since then has flown nearly every generation of attack helicopter used by the United States Army. Utah Air National Guard personnel assigned to the 191st Fighter Squadron perform maintenance on a F-51D in early 1950.

AR 220-5, Para 2-3 (e) U.S. Army unit designations use the ordinal number abbreviations "2d" and "3d," not "2nd" or "3rd" (for example, 2d Infantry Division, 703d Support Battalion).
